Deaths Of One-Third Killed By Nazis Were At Auschwitz

Oswald Kaduk, a key defendant in the trial at Bonn, of 21 former officials of the Auschwitz concentration camp, charged that "hatred of Germany" was prompting Polish witnesses to testify against him.

Kaduk made the charge in reply to previous testimony by Josef Seweryn of Warsaw that he once saw the former S.S. sergeant rape a woman prisoner, reports the New York Times. "When Kaduk saw that I had observed him, he threatened me with his gun, slapped me and took my watch," the witness said.

"I'm a simple man," Kaduk said, "but I am concerned about the truth." He said he never had raped a woman "since I didn't have to do that kind of thing."

Kazimierz Smolen, another Polish witness, said that, according to data compiled by Polish wartime resistance organizations, the Nazis had gassed in Auschwitz about three million people by the end of 1943. This estimate is substantially higher than most others.

According to most researchers, about a third of the four to six million Jews killed by the Nazis perished in Auschwitz. The number of non-Jewish victims in the camp is estimated at 260,000.

The Polish witness accused Hans Stark, 42 years old, the youngest man in the dock, of having taken part in shootings at the so-called black wall.

He recalled one case in which Stark led a woman with two little children to the execution site.

"Afterward I saw him walk from the black wall, nervous and smoking a cigarette," Mr. Smolen said.

In another Nazi crimes trial in Limburg, a German doctor testified that fellow doctors participating in Hitler's program of "mercy killings" had let children starve to death in specially built "fasting houses."

Prof. Gerhard Schmidt, of Lübeck, said that in one such house at Eglfing-Haar, Bavaria, colleagues had seen children as much as thirty pounds underweight.

U.A.H.C. Called On To Mull Over Reform All-Day Schools

Sharply different opinions on whether all-day Jewish schools should be established by Reform Judaism were voiced in New York at the annual assembly of the New York Federation of Reform Synagogues. The problem arose at a symposium devoted to this issue, at the Americana Hotel.

Rabbi Alvan Rubin, leader of Temple Sinai, Roslyn Heights, L.I., called on American Reform Judaism to establish a network of such schools in several cities, says the New York Times, to "bring fresh energy and renewed vitality for vibrant positive Jewish community."

He recommended that the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, the representative arm of all Reform congregations in the Western Hemisphere, sponsor such a network.

Last year, a study committee of the Commission on Jewish Education, representing both the Union and Central Conferences of American Rabbis, said it had come to no conclusion on the subject. But it did not oppose any attempt to establish an all-day school "with a Liberal Jewish outlook."

Rabbi Rubin's position was strongly opposed by Alan Bennett, president of the National Association of Temple Educators, and Rabbi Paul M. Steinberg, executive dean of the New York School of the Hebrew Union College — Jewish Institute of Religion.

Dr. Steinberg contended the establishment of such day-schools "serves to seriously undermine our commitment to the integrity and quality of public education."

He said that the public school "is the one instrumentality which can guarantee the true mingling and integration of children coming from varying racial, religious, and cultural backgrounds."

Mr. Bennett held that the creation of day schools would weaken Jewish educational goals in the religious school but "more impor-

Eshkol Seeks Mid-East Peace; Military Help; Desalination Of Sea Water

Levi Eshkol, Prime Minister, of Israel, who is visiting Washington at the invitation of President Johnson, is expected to try to focus his White House talks on three principal matters.

He will attempt to revive the abortive efforts of his predecessor, Ben-Gurion, to get a joint Kremlin-White House move to pacify the Middle East. Pending that, he will seek American help to reduce the United Arab Republic's superiority over Israel in military equipment, says the London Times. In the economic field, Mr. Eshkol is expected to concentrate on a request for assistance in building a nuclear reactor which would combine electric power generation and the distillation of sea water.

Other Middle East problems, such as the settlement of Palestine refugees, are also likely to come up for discussion, but little hope is entertained in Israel of achieving anything practical. Mr. Ben-Gurion, in a correspondence with President Kennedy, had proposed an appeal by the United States and the Soviet Union for peace between Israel and the Arabs, coupled with a joint guarantee of existing frontiers. Mr. Kennedy had not considered the proposal timely and Mr. Ben-Gurion then requested a public guarantee of Israel's security by the United States.

The feeling in Jerusalem is that the changed climate in world affairs has raised hopes and aspirations for an agreement between the United States and the Soviet Union for the relaxation of world tensions. Accordingly, Mr. Eshkol will ask President Johnson for assurances that any such agreement should provide also for the Middle East.

Such a development would obviously lead to a highly welcome decrease in arms supplies to the region, but in the meantime Mr. Eshkol would welcome military supplies from the United States. The Israel Prime Minister will try to convince the Americans that the best guarantee of stability in the region is a strong Israel army, well equipped with modern weapons.

The Israelis feel that the only reason President Nasser has been bombing Arab villages in Yemen and not Jewish settlements in Israel is that the Yemeni villages are defenceless — and the Israelis are not. Hence, they reason, a balance of arms must be maintained if President Nasser is to be deterred from attempting to liquidate Israel.

That balance, it is stated here, is being upset by the development of ground-to-ground rockets in Egypt, with the help of German scientists and technicians, and the supply of fast vessels with surface-to-surface rockets by the Soviet Union, says the London Times. Israel has no answer to these weapons.

Defensively, the Israelis have French-made jet fighters able to cope with any Arab aircraft, as well as anti-tank guided missiles said to be able to knock out any armour. However, they have no bombers to match the Ilyushin 28's and Topolev 16's, nor heavy tanks to match the Stalins, supplied by Russia to Egypt. The heaviest Israel armour is the British Centurion, a medium tank. At sea, the Egyptian navy has 10 submarines (nine of them oceangoing) to Israel's two, and seven destroyers to Israel's three.

Mr. Eshkol will try to convince President Johnson that the imbalance is a threat to peace in the region, because it might cause President Nasser to entertain illusions that he could successfully attack Israel.

In seeking assistance for the erection of a nuclear power reactor, Mr. Eshkol will refer to President Johnson's offer in February of "cooperative research" between the two countries in the desalination of sea water by nuclear power. The American leader made the apparently unsolicited proposal at a fund-raising dinner in New York for the Weizmann Institute of Science in Israel.

Israel is obviously more impatient than the United States to find a cheap process for making sea water fit for agriculture, industry, and human consumption. She overpumped millions of gallons last year from underground sources owing to water shortages after six years of drought, and wells along the Mediterranean coast have been closed because of the encroachment of sea water.

The diversion of water from the Jordan river system will not answer the country's needs and the only hope for prosperity lies in the eventual desalination of water from the Mediterranean or the Red Sea.

The Israelis are already desalting Red Sea water at Eilat with three 60,000 gallons a day experimental units in a freezing process invented by Alexander Zarchin, of Tel Aviv. A 6,000 kilowatt power plant which will supply electricity and distil sea water is rising near by and the first million gallon-a-day unit is due to go into operation next year, says the London Times. Neither of these processes can, as yet, produce water suitable for irrigation cheaply enough.

N.Y. Maccabees Organize, With Radio Cars, For Self-Protection Against Negro Youths

The Hasidic Jews of Brooklyn, weary of turning the other cheek, have decided to fight back. Usually, the men can be seen on the sidewalks of the Crown Heights section in their traditional Old World garb of long black coats and wide-brimmed, black hats, says the New York Times. They have shifted to radio patrol cars in an effort to protect members of the group from marauders.

The decision to patrol the community was made after a number of muggings and beatings of men and women on the street. Recently, children at a Yeshiva near the border between Crown Heights and Bedford-Stuyvesant were attacked by a group of Negroes.

The Jewish leaders say the marauders come from Bedford-Stuyvesant, a Negro district.

Rabbi Samuel Schrage, administrator of the United Lubavitcher Yeshivoth, the school where the attack occurred, said that the radio patrol cars were used primarily to prevent trouble.

Each car, he said, is manned by six young men, all over twenty-one years of age. They are not armed, but are "all strong," the rabbi explained.

"In case of trouble," Rabbi Schrage said, "our people try to overwhelm the attackers by sheer weight of numbers. If it is beyond their capacity, they call us on the radio and we call the police."

The new mobile force is called The Maccabees of the Community, a name chosen from Jewish history. In the second century B.C., the Maccabees, a distinguished Jewish family in Jerusalem, led the fight for religious freedom when the King of Syria attempted to force Hellenism upon Judea.

"We do not want to be classified as vigilantes or a military patrol," Rabbi Schrage said. "However, we will take such steps as are necessary to protect our people at night."

The cars he said, operate from sundown to dawn each night. They make regular radio reports back to a headquarters on Albany Avenue, says the New York Times. At least twenty non-Jews — twelve whites and eight Negroes — have volunteered to work the patrol on Friday nights, the Orthodox Sabbath.

The telephone number of the headquarters is being circulated throughout the community so that Jewish residents who must be on the street at night can call for protection. Rabbi Schrage said the community had been virtually housebound by fear in recent weeks.

Appeals to the police, he said, have led to conferences and the assignment of an extra police squad to the area. The Hasidic leaders feel, however, that the extra protection is not enough.

"The police know what we are doing," the rabbi said. "We didn't ask them if we could do because we didn't expect them to sanction it." A police spokesman said that the set-up did not have the department's blessing but that there was nothing illegal about a group of citizens organizing for self-protection.

Jewish leaders feel that most of the attacks have been carried out by marauding bands of Negro youths from Bedford-Stuyvesant. The two-way radios were donated by the owner of a taxi business. The patrol, Rabbi Schrage said, started on May 17.

The Maccabees, a distinguished Jewish family in Jerusalem in the second century B.C., led the fight for religious freedom when the King of Syria, Antiochus IV, attempted to force Hellenism upon Judea.

Matthias, an aged priest, together with his five sons, took to the mountains and led the rebellion against Antiochus. They were joined by other groups, including the Hasidim, who had constituted themselves as champions of the law. The aim of the rebellion was to revive Judaism and uproot Paganism.

In 166 Mattathias died, after charging his sons to give their lives, if necessary, for Judaism. He designated Judas Maccabeus as their leader.

In quick succession he overthrew the Syrian generals Apollonius, Seron, and Georgias. However, when Lysias, the Syrian

MARRIAGES

FRIEDMAN-KRASNOW

The marriage of Miss Louise Kala Krasnow, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Max M. Krasnow, 4960 Lacombe Avenue, to Seymour Ronald Friedman, son of Mrs. Sophie Friedman, 4640 Lacombe Avenue, and the late Harry Friedman, was solemnized at Beth El Synagogue, on Sunday, April 12, at half-past five o'clock, by Rabbi Allan M. Langner, assisted by Cantor H. Glaser, and Reverend W. Finer. The bride was given in marriage by her father. She wore a sheath gown of Alencon lace, the skirt of which finished with a train of peau de soie, extending from the waist. Her bouffant veil of tulle illusion was crowned with seed-pearl-beads; and she carried a prayer book with white orchids, and hyacinth bells. Miss Carole Pearl Krasnow, sister of the bride; and Miss Charron Friedman, sister of the groom; were maids of honour. Miss Krasnow was in a yellow, peau de soie gown, made with a white, beaded bodice. Miss Friedman wore a yellow, peau de soie gown, the bodice of which was trimmed with gold-coloured beadwork. Their tiaras were of seed-pearl-beads, and rhinestones; and they carried gold-coloured Chalice roses. Misses Lois Joan Ram, cousin of the bride; and Esther Skarf, as bridesmaids, were in gold-coloured, peau de soie gowns;—with seed-pearl-beaded headbands; and carried yellow roses. Maurice Gitelman was best man. The ushers were: Stuart Cohen, Bert Friedman, Eric Friedman, Jerry Friedman, Stanley Perel, and Ozzie Silverman, all cousins of the groom. Standards of yellow, and white roses, - arches of pom-poms, and candles in candelabra decorated the Synagogue. There was orchestra music. For the reception the tables held candelabra intertwined with yellow roses, and miniature white pom-poms. Mrs. Krasnow, mother of the bride, in a sheath gown of ivory, and gold-coloured silk, had an ivory-coloured hat; and a spray of mauve orchids. Mrs. Friedman, mother of the groom, was in a gold-coloured gown of raw silk, cut with an A-line skirt. Her hat matched it; and she had a spray of white orchids. Mrs. Morris Krasnow, grandmother of the bride, wore a gold-coloured crepe sheath, the lace bodice of which was appliqued with sequins. She had a lace hat of the same colour; and corsage of gold-coloured orchids. Party Baba Rings you bake yourself!

If you bake at home—try Fleischmann's Fast Rising Dry Yeast. There's less fuss, less preparation... and if you just follow our recipes carefully, you'll never need to worry "will it work?" It will. And you'll feel so proud!

You'll need for the batter:

- ¾ cup milk
- ½ cup granulated sugar
- 1 tsp. salt
- ¾ cup butter or Blue Bonnet Margarine
- ½ cup lukewarm water
- 1 tsp. granulated sugar
- 1 envelope Fleischmann's Fast Rising Dry Yeast
- 3 well-beaten eggs
- ¼ tsp. vanilla
- 3 cups (about) once-sifted all-purpose flour

for the sauce and glaze:

- 1½ cups granulated sugar
- 1 cup water
- 1 tbsp. lemon juice
- ¼ cup rum, optional
- Sieved marmalade

1 Scald milk; stir in the ½ cup sugar, salt and butter or margarine. Cool to lukewarm.

2 Meantime, measure lukewarm water into large bowl; stir in the 1 tsp. sugar. Sprinkle with yeast. Let stand 10 mins., then stir well. Stir in lukewarm milk mixture, well-beaten eggs, vanilla and 2 cups of the flour; stir until smooth. Stir in enough additional flour to make a medium-thick batter—about 1 cup more.

3 Cover with a damp towel. Let rise in warm place, free from draft, until doubled in bulk—about 1¼ hrs. Stir down batter; pour into 2 greased 8-cup ring moulds. (Choose pans with large centre holes and only half-fill the pans.) Cover with a damp cloth. Let rise until doubled in bulk—about 45 mins. Bake in a moderate oven, 350 degrees, 20 to 25 mins.

4 Meantime, gently boil the 1½ cups sugar and 1 cup water together for 10 mins. Stir in lemon juice and rum if being used. Drizzle hot Babas with some of the syrup. Cover and allow to mellow 3 or 4 hrs. At serving time, reheat one or both Babas; turn out onto serving plates and brush with marmalade. Fill with ice cream or fruit folded into whipped cream. Flame, if desired, with warm rum. Reheat remaining syrup and pass as a sauce. Makes 2 rings.

★ COMBINED JEWISH APPEAL ★

The Council of Presidents of Jewish women's organizations, initiated by the Women's Federation of Combined Jewish Appeal, is establishing a calendar clearance service to avoid duplication and conflict in major events. Mrs. J. Julius Block is president of the Women's Federation. This first project is in conjunction with the Canadian Jewish Congress calendar which lists all events taking place in the Jewish community. All organizations have been asked to send to the Congress office lists of their major events. A calendar clearance sub-committee is: Mesdames B. M. Bloomfield, A. S. Blauer, S. Buckman. The campaign organization of the Women's Federation will restrict canvassing to October and November. All organizations have been asked to refrain from holding fund-raising events then to give their full cooperation to the Joint Campaign for Combined Jewish Appeal and United Israel Appeal. A city-wide CJA Week in the fall will alert all women to the needs met by the campaign. The above publicity came in too late for the last issue of the Review for which it should have been received.

The Year 1963 That Almost Changed The Official Attitude Of The Catholic Church To The Jewish Problem

Although the Government banned the Tacuara and Guardia and closed down the neo-Nazi paper, "Segunda Republica", 200 uniformed Tacuara youths celebrated a Flag Day in Argentina by giving Nazi salutes and disseminating anti-Semitic propaganda, without police intervening.

In August, the "Frente Revolucionario Nacionalista", a paramilitary organization, distributed leaflets, accusing the Jews of having assassinated Eichmann. In Chile, the defunct Nazi Party was revived by a student, Hans Pfeiffer-Richter, who claimed a following of 6,000. Mexico has become an important center for the dissemination of anti-Semitic literature.

The United Nations

The General Assembly of 1963 dealt with several problems of interest from the Jewish point of view. They relate, in addition, to the extension of the term of the office of the High Commissioner for Refugees until December 31, 1963, to the following items:

1) The Assembly unanimously adopted a Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and, by a vote of 101, with none against and none abstaining, a resolution to give the widest publicity to the Declaration. The Declaration condemns all and every discrimination based on race, color, or ethnic origin, enjoins state, public, and private bodies and persons from discriminating on that basis, and to make all efforts necessary to prevent it. All propaganda and organizations based on ideas and theories of race superiority shall be condemned, and incitement to, or acts of, violence against any race shall be considered an offense against society, and punishable by law.

The resolution is directed not only to states and specialized agencies, but also non-governmental organizations, thus providing them, including the World Jewish Congress, with an international law basis for action to abolish racial discrimination.

2) The Assembly, conscious of the non-binding nature of the Declaration, requested the Economic and Social Council to ask the Commission on Human Rights to give "absolute priority" to the preparation of a draft international convention on the elimination of all forms of racial discrimination, to be submitted to the Assembly at its next session. The non-governmental organizations (including the World Jewish Congress) will thus have proper facilities to participate in framing the draft Convention.

In this connection, mention should be made of the efforts by the NGOs to rescind the previous decision by the Economic and Social Council not to have a 1964 meeting of the Commission on Human Rights. The Assembly agreed to urge ECOSOC to reconsider its decision, which in view of the Commission's task in connection with a draft Convention, could not be disregarded.

3) The Assembly did not complete the drafting of the Covenants on Human Rights, in particular the provisions relating to the international implementations of the Conventions. It decided to have the texts which were so far prepared transmitted to its members, so that a special effort could be made at the next session to complete the adoption of the entire text of the Covenants.

North Africa

The year 1963 witnessed the continued disintegration of the Algerian Jewish community. At the end of the year, the total number of Jews there was estimated at some 4,000, of whom 1,200 were in Algiers; 800 in Oran; 100 each in Tlemcen, and Bone; some 60 in Constantine. Other cities and towns still have a few families. Sidi-bel-Abbes is an example of the rapid dwindling of Algerian communities. In March, 1963, there were 160 Jews in the town. By the end of the year, the number had dropped to forty.

Synagogues or services are still functioning in the larger communities. In some (Algiers, Oran, Constantine) there still are rabbis or Shochtim.

Although relations with the Government are described as good, the year 1963 witnessed a ban on French-Jewish papers published in France; the dissolution of Jewish (together with other non-national-Arabic) clubs, due to a governmental decree; a new nationality law which has been regarded as discriminatory against non-Moslems, including Jews; the return of mail from Israel; and the arrest of a number of Jews during Yom Kippur on charges of cooperation with the Berbers; the confiscation of Jewish communal buildings, including synagogues.

The situation of the some 120,000 Moroccan Jews has remained more or less static. On the one hand, Jewish personalities continued to be elected or appointed to high offices (Bar Association; Director in the Ministry of Public Works; Senate; Chamber of Deputies; Chamber of Commerce; Supreme Court) and representatives of the Jewish community are received by the King.

On the other hand, anti-Jewish propaganda in some Moroccan periodicals, "Marocain"; "Akhbar-ed-Dounia"; "Alam", continued and the newly-founded Moroccan Socialist Party demanded that the Government impose the strictest measures against the Zionist movement and exert control over the public activities of Jews.

Emigration continued, but in March, thirteen Jews went on trial, on charges of attempting to bribe officials to issue passports, and as accomplices, thereto; and in April, three Jews were sentenced to prison on charges of using false passports with the intention of leaving the country.

In Tunisia, matters remained more or less as before. According to an official economic survey, out of 271 attorneys in Tunis, 86 are Jews; while 86 of 360 physicians are Jewish. Jews own 60 of 182 food firms; 86 of 170 hosiery establishments; 31 of 53 textile companies; and 18 out of 25 watchmakers.

Middle East Countries

In general, Jewish communities in the Middle East have been reduced to a shambles, so that the governments do not seem to bother about them. Nonetheless, 1963 witnessed certain deteriorations in the status of the Jews in Syria and Iraq. It was reported that a group of Syrian Jews were caught when they attempted to emigrate and were subject to trial on charges of "Zionist tendencies".

In Iraq, two contradictory measures were reported. On the one hand, the Government was said to permit Jews to travel abroad for health, educational, and business purposes; on the other, the Government ordered all Jews to appear at a special office to check their Iraqi nationality. Those whose citizenship is proven were to receive special identity cards. The rest were to be declared aliens and their property confiscated.

In Egypt, 1963 showed no overt signs of persecution but stateless and foreign Jews were refused exit visas; the only exception was made at the request of the Polish Consul in favor of former Polish citizens.

The Soviet Union

The "liberalizing wind now blowing" in the Soviet Union permitted Yevtushenko to tell Khrushchev openly that it was necessary to come to grips with the problem of anti-Semitism in the Soviet Union. But neither Khrushchev nor anyone else in an official position in the Soviet Union had, in 1963, either admitted the existence of anti-Semitism or even as much as indicated a change to the better on the Jewish scene.

On the contrary, the official policy of the Soviet Union during the year was to deny any unfriendly action against the Jews. Khrushchev denied its existence at a public meeting in the Kremlin and cautioned intellectuals against echoing such "Western-invented calumnies"; in a letter to Lord Russell, he termed the allegations "a crude falsehood, a malicious calumny."

This denial was also made in letters to Izvestia by Jewish readers; by the editor of "Sovietische Heimland", Aron Vergelis, and the prominent Soviet poet, Robert Rozhdestvensky, in New York, who contended that no Jewish problem exists in the USSR.

The negative attitude toward affirmation of anti-Jewish bias took a variety of forms, including refusal to publish a letter to the editor of Izvestia from Lord Russell (although earlier both Pravda and Izvestia had published Lord Russell's letter to Khrushchev and his reply); the refusal of the Soviet Ambassador in Brazil to receive a delegation which wished to submit to him a resolution adopted at a conference of intellectuals on the subject of the Jewish position in the USSR. When the resolution was sent by mail, it was returned.

The prosecution and trials for economic crimes, involving a large proportion of persons with Jewish-sounding names, continued. During the High Holidays, anti-religious pamphlets were distributed outside the Great Synagogue in Moscow, describing it as the sole remnant of religious darkness and chauvinism in the USSR.

The last kosher butcher shop in Moscow was closed. Closing of synagogues also took place and action was taken against "minyanim". In Moscow and Minsk, Jewish cemeteries were closed without other special burial places for Jews being provided.

Matzot for Passover were not supplied by state bakeries, but there was no interference with private baking, although several Jews were arrested for the "illegal manufacture of foodstuff and speculation."

Representatives of all major religions in the USSR, except the Jewish, were given honored places at Kremlin celebrations of the 46th anniversary of the Communist Revolution.

The soirées of music, songs (including Jan Peerce, of the Metropolitan Opera) and recitals, as well as presentations of amateur theater groups continued as in the past. A Hebrew dictionary was published; the Yiddish quarterly and the "Birobidjaner Shtern" appeared as before, without contributing anything to Jewishness. Jews were elected to municipal posts; one (Marahak) won the Lenin Prize for literature; a number of Jews received technology awards.

Apparently, to demonstrate the good attitude towards Jews, a Soviet bulletin published in London stated that 927,100 Jews were employed in state-owned economic establishments; 36,173 Jews were active in state research institutions, laboratories, etc.; and 77,177 Jewish students were enrolled in institutions of higher learning.

The Communist Countries

The year 1963 brought no significant changes in the Jewish position in this part of the world as such. The only exception appeared to be Poland, where considerable dismissals or retirements of Jewish senior officials in the Defense and Interior Ministries and Army occurred. Later in the year, a number of high-ranking Jewish officers of the Army and Air Force were relieved of their posts and one of the last Jewish senior officers of the Communist Party resigned.

The Prosecution of War Criminals

The year 1963 witnessed, in general, a continuation of the preparation of Nazi crime trials in Germany and, at the end of the year, the opening of the Auschwitz trial in Frankfurt. Eight investigations and trials also took place in Austria (where the dismissal of charges against Franz Murer, the murderer of the Wilna Jews, aroused world-wide protest; the case is pending before the Supreme Court); Poland, USSR, Czechoslovakia, France, Italy, and Holland.

There was global activity by the World Jewish Congress to track down witnesses, hundreds of whom were found, interviewed, and referred to the competent prosecuting authorities. This action, spearheaded by the Institute of Jewish Affairs in New York, was aided by all World Jewish Congress affiliates and offices throughout the world.

In France, Karl Oberg, known as the "butcher of Paris", and his associate, Helmut Knochen, the last two Nazi criminals held, were released.

Italy rejected a West German request for the extradition of Kroeger, wanted on charges of having killed 3,000 Jews in Lvov (Poland).

Chile refused the extradition of Walter Rauff because of superannuation, and pardoned Joseph Feuchtinger, who had been sentenced to life imprisonment.

In Hungary, the far-reaching amnesty proclaimed by Kadar, also applies to war criminals.

In Austria, the statute of limitations was extended.

50 World Jewish Leaders Testify In Bonn For 200,000 Others

More than fifty Jewish leaders from all over the world testified in the West German Parliament in behalf of 200,000 Jews who are ineligible for indemnification under current law, says the New York Times. The issue of amending Bonn's indemnification law has been before Parliament for years.

The problem facing West German lawmakers is to decide how Jews who were permitted to leave Communist nations in Eastern Europe since 1953 are to be compensated for their suffering under the Nazi occupation. Laws now stipulate that claims for compensations are valid only if made up to October 1, 1953.

Bonn has generally agreed to compensate Jews who came to the West after that date and has suggested a 500 million mark ($150 million) fund to be used by Jewish claims organizations. Jewish representatives have contended that two to three billion marks are needed.

A West German prosecutor who has spent the last five years tracking down Nazi war criminals came out against an extension of the statute of limitations covering their crimes.

Under current law, Nazi crimes other than murder can be prosecuted until May 8, 1965, twenty years after the Nazi capitulation in World War II. In murder cases the statute applies for thirty years.

The prosecutor, Erwin Schule, who heads the Central Office for the Investigation of Nazi Crimes, said that a special law would be needed to extend the statute of limitations.

"It was special laws that the Nazis operated with and it would be wrong to adopt this method," Mr. Schule said in an interview published in the official government bulletin.

"The Federal Republic [West Germany], because it is prosecuting Nazi crimes, must strictly follow the principles of a nation based on law," Mr. Schule added, reports the New York Times. Mr. Schule, whose office has completed investigations of 640 crime cases and turned them over to West German courts, said that the statute of limitations was automatically suspended the moment justice officials started investigating a case.

On The Contrary, Arabs Mistreated Jews Prior To State Of Israel

By J. Daniel Khazzoom, Visiting Assistant Professor of Economics, Cornell University, Ithaca, N.Y.

The following appeared as a letter to the New York Times:

Sami Hadawi, in a letter in The New York Times of May 20, deals with the condition of the Jews in Arab countries. As one of the approximately half million Jews who had to leave their homes behind in Arab lands in order to save themselves persecution and death from "other than natural causes," I find the letter misleading.

It is not true that news of ill-treatment of Jews in Arab lands began to appear, as Mr. Hadawi argues, only after the establishment of the State of Israel. Prior to that time, numerous reports appeared in the Western world calling attention to the deteriorating position of Jewish, Kurdish, Nestorian, Armenian, Chaldean and other minorities in the Arab countries.

Arab leaders revealed no particular interest in the reports on the treatment of minorities in their countries. On the contrary, most leaders resented such reports and considered them as intrusions in the internal affairs of their countries. Israel did not bring unfounded accusations of ill-treatment of Jews, as Mr. Hadawi submits, but helped bring into focus an already intolerable situation.

By implication, Mr. Hadawi argues that Arab policy has been one of differentiating between Zionism and Judaism. This argument is reminiscent of similar claims encountered in recent, as well as contemporary, history.

Karl Marx, a notorious Jew-baiter, contended that he is not against the Sabbath Jew, but rather against the capitalist Jew; Adolf Hitler claimed he differentiates between the commonplace Jew and the international Jew, and that he was opposed to the latter only; and George L. Rockwell denies he is against the Jew; rather, he argues, he is against the Communist Jew.

Events made it clear, however, that in none of these cases could the alleged distinction have been real. It was rather mere convenient cover up for more encompassing racism. The denial of wholesale prejudice and the stress on alleged screening were meant to gain the sympathy of the uninitiated.

The seemingly innocent claim of distinction between the Zionist and the non-Zionist Jew is as treacherous, and conceals behind as dangerous elements.

It is a matter of record that Jews in the Middle East were not active in the Zionist movement; yet, while the Arabs launched their attack against Israel in 1948, they waged a second war of terror against the Jews in the Arab lands. Mass arrests became the order of the day; cases of murders in prisons and of executions following mock trials were numerous; and torture was not uncommon at that time.

It is further no secret that translated copies of Hitler's "Mein Kampf" have been distributed in Egypt to military officers.

The Year 1963 That Almost Changed The Official Attitude Of The Catholic Church To The Jewish Problem

By Dr. Nehemiah Robinson, director of the World Jewish Congress Institute Of Jewish Affairs, just before he died in January, 1964. This survey is being included in a memorial to Dr. Robinson

From the Jewish point of view, 1963 was in general a year of comparative stability. No mass exodus occurred, no radical changes affected the Jewish position anywhere in the world. Even the one event, for which there had been high hope, a proclamation by the Ecumenical Council on a changed official attitude towards the Jews, did not materialize. The complicated position in South Africa, as a result of the apartheid policies of the Government and the international pressures against it, did not involve any serious consequences for the Jewish community.

The year 1963 was thus marked mostly by events of more local than world-wide nature, although sometimes of importance beyond their geographical limits. This refers mostly to anti-Jewish activities, in particular, in Latin America; the stalemate in the efforts to improve the position of the Jews in the Soviet Union; the continued emigration from North Africa and some East European countries; the start of emigration from Argentina; certain new anti-Jewish measures in the Arab countries; and the slow process of drafting binding human rights provisions by the United Nations.

The comparative stability refers in particular to such countries as the United States, Canada, Great Britain, the far-flung communities of Australia and New Zealand, continental Europe and, although to a lesser extent, except for what will be mentioned specifically, to Latin America. While the process of integration in France continues, the spiritual integration of the North African immigrants has by no means been relieved, but this will be a long process, due to basic differences in the outlook, customs, traditions of both segments. Israel is a story by itself, which is not treated here.

The following deals with such events, relating mostly to specific areas of Jewish interest, which merit particular consideration:

2. The Christian Churches and the Jews

The non-Catholic churches in the free world continued their policies of officially disassociating themselves from anti-Semitism and proclaiming a fight against it. Thus, the General Assembly of the World Lutheran Federation, which met in Helsinki, strongly condemned racial discrimination and bigotry which continue to scar human relationships, and called for constructive efforts to end all forms and consequences of discrimination.

The first "Church Day" of the Evangelic churches of the German-speaking parts of Switzerland also called for energetic steps to counter any discrimination against Jews; requested all Christians to participate individually and collectively in assistance to Jews; and urged that the prayer for Jews, existing in most liturgies, be made an integral part of the prayers.

The Catholic Church's eagerness to follow this general trend, of which there had been indications for some time, came to the fore in 1963 in the draft on "The Attitude of Catholics Toward Non-Christians, Particularly Jews", distributed to the members of the Ecumenical Council; and a communiqué thereon issued by the "Vatican Secretariat for the Promotion of Christian Unity." The communiqué made it clear that the draft was entirely religious, that is, it had nothing to do with Zionism or anti-Zionism.

The draft's basic tenet was that the responsibility for Christ's death falls upon sinful mankind: it was to atone for the sins of every man that Christ willingly offered himself on the cross. Nonetheless, the draft reaffirmed the guilt of Jewish leaders of Christ's days in bringing about the crucifixion of Jesus, although it stated that this personal guilt of the leaders could not be pinned on the Jewish people as a whole, either in his time or today.

The draft was also intended to urge preachers and catechists to promote mutual understanding and esteem between Jews and Catholics, and not to present the crucifixion as an event giving rise to disdain or hatred or persecution of the Jews.

The discussion and decision on this draft, the exact wording of which is still confidential, was postponed for a variety of reasons for the next session of the Ecumenical Council to take place in 1964.

The release, apparently to allay Arab apprehensions, denied that the Secretariat for the Promotion of Christian Unity ever considered a proposal by the World Jewish Congress to delegate an official observer to the Vatican Council. This denial was quite unnecessary since the existence of such a plan had been repeatedly denied by the World Jewish Congress.

It has been frequently pointed out that anti-Semitism is a phenomenon exclusively of the Christian world. In this complex phenomenon no single factor was as potent and widespread as the accusation of "deicide" by the Jews: Generation upon generation was educated in the belief that the Jews killed Christ and have to atone for it forever.

Hatred of the Jews started as far back as the time when the New Testament was written and reached a stage of wild fanaticism in the fourth and fifth centuries. It was at that time that mobs began putting synagogues to the torch and important bishops opposed the orders to reconstruct them.

The "marriage" between Church and State led to anti-Jewish laws, sometimes even to official restrictions on the exercise of the Jewish religion. By and by, the Jews became the damned enemies of God (one killed Jews to avenge one's God whom they had killed) even before they were deprived of the protection of the law and subject to the whim of the lay and church authorities.

It is true that with the advent of the Renaissance, Western culture became more and more secularized; purely religious reproaches against the Jews started decreasing, but instead national and economic antagonism increased.

As G. Molin's "Why Can A Christian Not Be An Anti-Semite?" ("Judaica", June 1963) so clearly demonstrated, the basis of this secular anti-Semitism which found its climax in the racial theory of Nazism and which, as mentioned, is unknown in extreme Christian countries, was nothing else but religious anti-Semitism, even though it was preached by the anti-Christian Hitler.

In fact, discrimination or hatred of a group presupposes the prior existence of a bias against it:

Karl Thieme's "Judenfeindschaft" ("Jew Enmity") correctly pointed out that the image of the Jew, as created by Christian church polemic and mass murder, generally did not change through legal emancipation and assimilation and the progressive "dechristianization" of the European nations.

A change in the official Catholic or Protestant attitude toward the Jews is welcome, but it is doubtful that it will alter the centuries-old antipathy and misconception regarding Jews. Much more effort towards understanding will be required to root out this unique evil of Western civilization.

8. Neo-Nazism And Anti-Semitism
a) International Context

Neo-Nazi and anti-Semitic movements in Europe appear, if one is to believe the participants of the latest meeting of the Malmoe Anti-Semitic International in Lyons, to progress slowly. In France, for instance, intrigues and rivalries allegedly prevent development and only financial support by the International averted bankruptcy. Similar pessimism was voiced by the Dutch representatives.

The Austrians were more optimistic and the Germans believed that only a real shock could revive sleeping pro-Nazi sympathies and anti-Semitic feelings. While this might be true of the Malmoe International, the World Union of National Socialists, the Colin Jordan — C. L. Rockwell outfit, continued a vigorous campaign of expansion.

For instance, in June, swastika posters of the National Socialist Movement of Britain were distributed in Frankfurt, Munich, and Freiburg by links between local neo-Nazi organizations and the World Union.

The British have also sought to infiltrate the U.S.A. even if for the prosaic purpose of collecting needed funds. Thus, Austin Brooks visited the U.S.A. for the League of Loyalists Movement (it had lost its Chilean financier), and addressed meetings organized by such bodies as Keep America Committee, Pro-America Forum, Sun-Workshop.

In Canada, Mr. Brooks was rather disappointed at the lack of consciousness about the "threat of internationalism." Nowhere did he obtain the funds needed.

For its part, Sir Oswald Mosley's Union Movement sent lieutenants to Italy to establish a branch of the "Young Europe" movement. Funds for that purpose were reportedly provided from Spain, South America, and Germany. Italian neo-Fascists were reaching out to Germany; ENAS opened an office in Frankfurt for the Italian workers in Germany. In Bologna (Italy) an international conference of Fascist youth organizations took place with the participation of 120 delegates from 16 countries.

Lincoln Rockwell followed up his written contacts with Latin America by a visit in October to Chile. He was barred, however, from Argentina and Uruguay, as an undesirable alien.

In Mexico, the youth group of the Partido Acción Nacional established a separate organization which proclaimed its solidarity with "Young Europe", with Argentine Nazi bodies, and with Italian, Spanish, British, and American anti-Semitic movements.

b) Domestic Actions

The year 1963 witnessed anti-Jewish activity in practically all countries of the Western world.

Swastikas and anti-Jewish slogans, sometimes accompanied by anti-Semitic outbursts, appeared in Australia, Austria, Guatemala, Italy, Brazil, Norway, Germany, Switzerland, Canada, Britain, Mexico, U.S.A., Spain, South Africa. Although some of their meetings were banned, the neo-Nazi parties in Britain continued their rallies, resulting in clashes and arrests. Colin Jordan resumed his leadership of the British National Socialist Movement, after having served a nine-month prison term.

Anti-Semitic materials were disseminated in the U.S.A., Italy, Germany, Brazil, and other lands.

In Britain a new anti-Semitic magazine, "Panorama," appeared. An unexploded bomb was discovered in a Rio de Janeiro synagogue. Bullets from a shotgun shattered windows and doors of several Jewish shops and the Community Center in Salvador. A bomb blast shattered the front offices of the "Jewish Chronicle" in London. Two bombs were thrown into a synagogue and a church in Guatemala City. In Norway, an armed, Nazi-type youth gang was discovered.

Street fights between Jews and pro-Nazis occurred in Metz (France); desecrations and vandalism of synagogues took place in Italy and Australia. Vandals continued to desecrate Jewish cemeteries in the U.S.A., Austria, Germany, Britain, France. Attacks on synagogues and yeshivas (seminaries) took place in the U.S.A.

In Toronto, Canada, anti-Jewish leaflets were distributed late in November in connection with the assassination of President Kennedy, accusing the Jews of Communism, calling for a boycott of Jewish food and accusing the "Zionist Jews" of murder, rape, and other crimes. Rowdies molested Jews on Winnipeg Beach. The main synagogue in Bucharest, Hungary, was desecrated and insults were hurled at Jews in the city of Drzedrzoniow in Poland.

In Latin America, Argentina, Mexico, and Chile were hardest hit by anti-Jewish activity and propaganda. In Argentina, where 18 Nazi organizations were reported to operate, bombs were thrown within a three-day period in November at the buildings of the Kehillah (Jewish Community Council) in Buenos Aires, and the Cultural Society in two suburbs of Buenos Aires. A swastika was smeared on the Great Synagogue in Buenos Aires and a copy of "Mein Kampf" was placed on the steps.

These acts were apparently part of broader violence, directed also against non-Jews by: "Peronist Youth"; "Guardia Restauradora Nacionalista"; "Movimiento Argentino Nacional"; and "Movimiento Unificado Tacuara."

Earlier, a time bomb was found near a synagogue in Buenos Aires; shots were fired at the Jewish hospital in Buenos Aires. In January members of Tacuara attacked a camping area for "chalutzim"
